

Bach flower remedies originate back to the 1930's and were discovered by British physician and bacteriologist Dr. Edward Bach. After long observations of his patients, Dr. Bach realized that certain personality types will develop diseases, specific to them. He came to the conclusion that disease occurs as a result of disharmony between body and soul and that we must focus on the healing of thoughts and feelings in order to effect healing at the physical level. An imbalance between the higher self and the personality or lower self is caused when our personality refuses to learn its soul lesson. Dr. Bach researched and discovered 38 flower remedies and developed a safe and perhaps most effective method to address and remove emotional patterns that cause physical manifestations of disease. Each flower was found to embody the positive and harmonizing force for a negative emotional state, be it fear, resentment, grief, uncertainty, despair or loneliness.

The primary purpose of the flower remedies is to help us to change and bring us back into alignment with our higher self so we can experience a happy and fulfilled life.

Bach Flower Remedies

"Health is listening solely to the commands of our souls; in being trustful as little children; in rejecting intellect (that knowledge of good and evil); with its reasonings, its 'fors' and 'againsts', its anticipating fears; ignoring convention, the trivial ideas and commands of other people, so that we can pass through life untouched, unharmed, free to serve our fellow-men."
